INTRODUCTION

Our award-winning vodka drinks use Hells Half Acre 1885 and organic dextrose from a unique source, the Cassava Root. Vodka recipes are especially challenging to make because the alcohol itself usually has no specific flavor or intensity.

However, when the cassava root is crushed and dried into a powdery state, it creates Tapioca Starch. After saccharification, this organic tapioca starch combined with naturally occurring enzymes produces more than double the amount of fermentable sugars than in your standard corn, grain, or potato fermentation. To simplify things, our vodka is naturally sweet – enhancing and layering our drinks to create a more thorough drinking experience for the vodka connoisseur. A rich harvest of starches (turned into sugars) yields a smooth & sweet, floral scented vodka.

Since vodka is a neutral spirit, it's typically created without distinctive character, aroma, taste, or color. It's usually not aged and can be made from pretty much any grains, potatoes, sugars, or fruits that are fermented. Over the last few years, corn growers have pushed high fructose corn syrup as a natural sweetener, and that's just not clear enough. Many people hear the word “corn” and automatically associate vegetables, health, and longevity with corn syrup. Most of the vodkas out there are made with genetically modified corn [turned into corn syrup], and super refined white sugars. But they don't have to be... From the beginning, we wanted HHA 1885 to be a “health conscious” adult beverage. Not because we're vegans (although we do have two vegans on our marketing team), but because why not! It's easy to create a cheap, harsh vodka. But the Wild West was about using creativity & strategy to survive. Ultimately, we wanted to create a vodka that tastes good and feels good going down. These recipes will raise hell, and evoke the rebel spirit in each of us!
